 - Section 2: The Making of the United Kingdom: 1485–1750 (pages 6–9)
 - Section 3: Britain: 1750–circa 1900 (pages 10–13)
- Each section is divided into two parts:
 - Part A: Evidence Questions
 - Part B: Essay Questions
- You must attempt one Part A and one question from Part B. These may be taken from the same section or from different sections.
- Handwriting and presentation are important.

SECTION 1

MEDIEVAL REALMS: BRITAIN 1066–1485

PART A: EVIDENCE QUESTIONS

Read the introduction and the sources opposite and then answer all the questions. You must refer to the sources in ALL your answers.

The sources all refer to the first outbreak of the Black Death in Europe in 1348–50.

- A1. Look at Source A. According to this source, why was there a need to dig burial pits? (2)
- A2. Look at Source B. Why did the state feel it necessary to use burial pits? (3)
- A3. Look at Source C. How does this source support what Sources A and B say about the burial of the plague dead? (7)
- A4. Look at and refer to ALL the sources. How useful are they to us in studying how medieval people dealt with the victims of the plague? (8)

SOURCE A: based on a twenty-first century historian's description of the burial of plague victims at Smithfield in London in 1349

Smithfield must have been a hellish sight. The number of corpses cannot possibly have been fitted in with the polite spacing enjoyed by the bodies in John Corey's graveyard. This was no mass grave but a burial pit: rather than laying the bodies in rows, they were stacked on top of each other starting from one end of the giant hole, so as to make sure that the rakers need not walk over the decaying remains when burying the next cartload. All day the rakers came, with bodies piled high on their carts. According to Robert of Avesbury [a contemporary], 'more than two hundred corpses were buried almost every day in the new burial ground next to Smithfield, and this was in addition to the bodies buried in other churchyards in the city'.

SOURCE B: based on a modern historian's account of the Black Death

People strongly resented and resisted attempts to bury their loved ones in pits rather than sacred ground around the local parish church. The use of mass graves served two purposes for the state. First, the practical excuse was the large number of bodies had to be disposed of quickly. Second, the decay of plague bodies might produce infected gases that could rise out of the ground and cause further infections. However, despite the threats of infection, common people made it clear that they were opposed to the namelessness and barbarity of these mass burials.

SECTION 2

THE MAKING OF THE UNITED KINGDOM: 1485–1750

PART A: EVIDENCE QUESTIONS

Read the introduction and the sources opposite and then answer all the questions. You must refer to the sources in ALL your answers.

The sources all provide information about the Jacobite Rebellion of 1745–46.

- C1. Look at Source A. What does it tell us about the government forces' treatment of Highland civilians? (2)
- C2. Look at Source B. How is the Duke of Cumberland viewed by this writer? (3)
- C3. Look at Source C. How does it support Sources A and B concerning the way in which the government forces acted after the battle of Culloden? (7)
- C4. Look at and refer to ALL the sources. How useful are they in helping us to understand why the Hanoverians were so hated in parts of Scotland after the battle of Culloden? (8)

SOURCE A: a nineteenth-century representation of the atrocities by the Duke of Cumberland's men after Culloden

SOURCE B: from a modern history book

Cumberland was a hard man, accustomed to employ savage discipline, and in his response to the Jacobites he revealed the fear and hatred they had aroused in the Hanoverian regime. Cruelty was to be used as a policy. The contrast with the Jacobites is interesting. Charles Edward intervened frequently in the cases of both his own soldiers, in trouble for indiscipline or other faults and of those of civilians suspected or known to have committed hostile actions. His interventions were merciful, reflecting not only his own personality, but also an effort to win the hearts and minds of the population. Jacobite conduct in England was not characterized by cruelty. [Yet after Culloden], expeditions were ordered to kill the Jacobites and destroy their property. Some of the expeditions were especially cruel, characterized by killings, rapes and systematic devastation.

SOURCE C: based on a book first written in 1908 about the adventures of Bonnie Prince Charlie

A hideous story has received a place in history, that the Duke of Cumberland directed a wounded Highland officer to be shot because he looked at him insolently. That a prince 25 years of age, well brought up as the Duke had been, who was universally liked by the army, and who had exhibited not only personal courage at Dettingen, but also when wounded himself had shown special care for a French wounded officer lying beside him, could give such an order is impossible of belief. On further investigation the order was probably given by General Hawley – his own soldiers called him Chief Justice and The Hangman.

SECTION 3

BRITAIN: 1750–CIRCA 1900

PART A: EVIDENCE QUESTIONS

Read the introduction and the sources opposite and then answer all the questions. You must refer to the sources in ALL your answers.

The sources all provide information about the Great Chartist Demonstration in 1848, Kennington Common.

- E1. Look at Source A. What can we learn about the Government's reaction to the Chartists? (2)
- E2. Look at Source B. How does the writer say that the Chartist demonstration will be successful? (3)
- E3. Look at Source C. How does it support Sources A and B concerning the Chartist threat? (7)
- E4. Look at and refer to ALL the sources. How useful are they in helping us understand how the Chartist movement was seen in 1848? (8)

SOURCE A: The Great Chartist Demonstration, a contemporary sketch from Punch; the Duke of Wellington, the Prime Minister, had called for special constables to be used in case of violence

SOURCE B: What happened on 10 April 1848? – from The Illustrated London News, 15 April 1848

As the speeches of those gentlemen had led the public to anticipate some serious disturbance of the peace of the metropolis (London), the Government and the civil authorities had made some extensive and well-arranged preparations to suppress (calm down) any violation of order. However, the interference of the authorities was not called for ... (the demonstration) will be seen, very ordinary and common-place. They would then give instructions to the people not to come in collision with the authorities, or give an opportunity to the Government to create a bloody slaughter among them – for he (a Chartist) knew that they only wanted the smallest excuse for doing so. They (the Chartists) were for peace.

SOURCE C: from a modern historian's study of Chartism

'There was scarcely a merchant, a banker, or a shopkeeper, or clerk in London, except the very old, who did not take the oath and carry a truncheon [stave or club], to crack the skull of a Chartist if it became necessary', recalled the author Charles Mackay. Almost every gentleman, servant, and shopkeeper was sworn-in, according to the MP William Ewart, who also described how a retired general took command of the area round his home, drilled the special constables and organised them into geographical sections, with messengers to link them all.
